

IT Contract Optimization

Reduce IT Supplier Risks and Curtail Technology Over-Spend

IT supplier contracts are celebrated with pricing concessions and initial discounts. However, many enterprises later discover that they are overpaying or gaining little to zero value from their vendor arrangements.

These vendor agreements are not customized or optimized for a company's specific environment, which results in excessive license and support fees. Companies need the proper internal processes and controls to continually inspect, refine, and renegotiate IT agreements once the initial contract is executed.

89% of companies expect their IT budgets to grow or remain steady in 2019. Without the right optimization and preparedness, organizations are at risk for supplier lock-in and significant overspending, whether on-premise or in the cloud. This not only increases the dollars required to run your company, but also depletes the funds needed to grow your company.

IT agreements need to be inventoried, inspected, and assessed to identify opportunities for supplier rationalization and cost optimization. As trivial as it may sound, IT vendor management and procurement teams do not have sufficient bandwidth to take a deeper look at existing contracts. Connor Consulting is the strategic solution to reducing vendor costs in an increasingly digital world. With the help of Connor, IT executives can take cost divots out of their vendor contracts, while simultaneously minimizing risk and the impact on operations.
